

CONCLUSION

Diego de la Cruz

Through this vacation, the Millers discovered that spending time together was more meaningful than the trip itself. Their 13-year-old son experienced marine life for the first time while his parents explored the mangroves by kayak. Facing the fear of snorkeling together led to a moment of bonding and personal growth. They also enjoyed a sunset sailing trip, swam with dolphins, and tried jet skiing and paddleboarding, which allowed each family member to connect with nature in their own way. Since they traveled between September 29 and October 7, they avoided large crowds and enjoyed a peaceful environment. The beachfront hotel provided comfort and easy access to water activities, while their budget of 64,000 pesos allowed them to explore local traditions and buy souvenirs. In the end, this vacation was not just about spending money—it was about gaining new perspectives, strengthening family bonds, and creating lasting memories that will stay with them long after the trip ended.

MILLERS FAMILY TRIP

INTRODUCCION

Natalia Rodriguez

The Miller family, made up of two adults and their 13 year old son, planned a vacation in Nuevo Vallarta, Mexico, with a budget of 64,000 pesos. Their main goal was to create a trip that combined relaxation, entertainment, and cultural experiences. To begin, they set aside the largest part of their budget for a beachfront hotel, which offered direct access to the sea, a pool, and recreational spaces. They also reserved funds for transportation and meals, ensuring that their stay would be both comfortable and stress-free. With these essentials covered, the family focused on planning activities that would allow them to make the most of their time together. They intended to enjoy water sports, walks along the beach, and visits to local markets to learn more about the region's traditions. Finally, they kept part of their budget for souvenirs, ensuring they could take home meaningful reminders of their trip.

FUN

The budget of 64,000 pesos allowed them to organize each detail in advance. They separated a specific amount for water tours, another for meals in local restaurants and hotel buffets, and a portion for transportation and unexpected expenses. They also considered that some days they would prefer to eat at local markets or food stands, giving them the chance to taste authentic Mexican dishes at affordable prices. This way, the money was distributed in a way that each family member could enjoy their favorite part of the trip without overspending. Careful planning gave them peace of mind, knowing that the budget was enough to cover both the main attractions and small indulgences.
